One of the critical tasks of post-Soviet Russia is the transformation of its education system. Focusing on higher education, I analyze recent higher education reform efforts in three broad periods. I begin with the Soviet legacy bequeathed by the seven decades of GOSPLAN/Party dominance, and then discuss the perestroika reforms that ended abruptly with the breakup of the Soviet Union.

Education in the Soviet Union was guaranteed as a constitutional right to all people provided through state schools and universities. The education system that emerged after the establishment of the Soviet Union in 1922 became internationally renowned for its successes in eradicating illiteracy and cultivating a highly educated population. Its advantages were total access for all citizens and post-education employment. The Soviet Union recognized that the foundation of their system depended upon

I come from the post-Soviet country of Georgia, where the education system was totally corrupted with no accessibility to quality education. Thousands of post-graduates obtained degrees without obtaining any real knowledge, and as a result, the country saw a lack of proficiency in many fields. Another problem that led to a rise in youth unemployment was the relation of educational programmes to market demand.

EDUCATIONAL REFORM IN POST-SOVIET RUSSIA: LEGACIES AND ...

In the words of its historians, the Stalinist regime desired an educational system created in the image of its authoritarian politische Realkultur and designed to produce dedicated workers and loyal disciples.1 Two Russian scholars, Feliks Fradkin and M.G. Plokhova, expressed most forcefully of all the Party-state's objectives and, it seemed to them, corresponding achievements: the Stalinist state required a mechanical submission of society to its will.
